the Vatican.

This past weekend, more than 12,000 people waited in line in St. Louis to catch a glimpse of relics on display in a rare exhibit showcasing fragments of artifacts said to be linked to the final days of Christ.

Two of the most intriguing pieces of the exhibit, put on by the nonprofit Apostolate for Holy Relics (search), are slivers of wood believed to be from the actual cross Jesus was crucified on, along with a shard the group says comes from his crown of thorns.

Andrew Walther, vice president of the organization, said each relic has documentation of its authenticity from

But academics like UCLA Religious Studies Director Scott Bartchy (search) doubt that most so-called Passion relics are real.
